Description:

Raise your glass and join Heather Heyford as she pours a second serving in her series following these headstrong wine heiresses in their quest to strike out on their own...Merlot St. Pierre is struggling to break free from her family name. Her college classmates whisper behind her back that her passion for jewelry design is little more than a hobby, since she'll always have her father's fortune. But Meri is determined to prove them wrong, and with the help of a handsome jewelry buyer, she just may taste her first sip of success-as long as she can hide who she really is...Mark Newman family owns a chain of high-end jewelry stores, and hes working hard to get out from under his aunts thumb and prove he has a good eye and a head for business. Hes certain Meris designs could be the next big thing, but hell have to convince her that she can use her famous last name to her advantage. As their business partnership takes root, an attraction begins to flourish-but theyll both find that love, like wine, takes time to perfect...

I enjoyed watching the relationship build between Merlot and Mark. Merlot was volatile enough to keep me guessing. And Mark? He was a keeper, all around. The jewelry and jewelry business was an interesting subplot that added tension. Merlot and Mark were both so passionate about it, in their own ways, that it was a great vehicle to show their characters. A fun read.
